This is the same group that Gerry addressed a while ago; I'm not sure there's anything new here.

I found the links to the two articles in the Chronicle that Chuck refers to. Both mention Wildcare. I also see that Wildcare has information on its website opposing the Farallones project. Has there been any effort to educate them on benefits to Island ecosystems through non-native rodent eradications?

RE: Luckenbach contingency request to NPFC for Farallon mice

I noticed that the article about rodenticide in the SF Chronicle had a Part 2, this last Sunday. So, there are two Sunday stories in the Home and Garden section. This one mentions various local governments which have banned sale of a few products within their jurisdictions, including SF. The Farallones are within the CCSF, as you probably recall. While the ordinance is probably not applicable to our proposed use, it is further evidence that we may face a legal and/or political challenge.
